To the Editor: We appreciate the comments of Osugi et al. regarding our publication on citrullinated proteins in the joints of rheumatoid arthritis (RA) patients, and we thank them for highlighting this research area ([@bb0005]). We were surprised by their comment that our proposed synovial biomarker panel was "focused on the detection of rheumatoid arthritis", because we believed that it also could be a promising diagnostic tool for detection of other rheumatological conditions, and autoimmune and autoinflammatory diseases in general. However, we agree with their view that "creating more sensitive biomarkers might help, but current tests do not have the specificity to allow them to be effective, and for the most part, are directed towards the detection of RA." Osugi et al. point out that "CXCL13 is a chemokine that is released by lymphocytes during the active phase of RA and induces chemotaxis of B cells, as well as activation and adhesion of B cells. It has been proposed that B cells and their derived products are associated with RA pathogenesis and may be an important target in RA therapies." They also state that "B cells have been shown to drive the autoantibody response in some models of RA. In vitro studies have demonstrated that RA synovial fluid cells are able to secrete significantly higher levels of CXCL13 than OA or healthy synovial fluid cells ([@bb0010], [@bb0015], [@bb0020])." Therefore, we agree with their view that "It is therefore possible that B cell--related chemokines, such as CXCL13, may a1d647c40b
